

Effectively removing makeup

Derm*Centric* Newsletter Issue No. 2

If you were apart of the generation that once exclusively used neutrogena makeup wipes to remove makeup, this newsletter may be for you!

Though makeup wipes can be useful for removing partial makeup off of the lips, hands, or other surfaces, it does not do the best job at effectively and completely removing makeup off of the skin at the end of the day. Makeup wipes are convenient and quick, but making sure all makeup is washed off your face at night is more important than a quick wipe on your face. If makeup is left on your face while you sleep, you are opening up the possibility of your pores clogging, breakouts, and excess oil on the skin. It is important to emphasize that one should never go to sleep in their makeup.

It is crucial to wholly remove makeup from the skin, and here are some great products that will remove makeup much more effectively than makeup remover wipes.

Micellar Water

Micellar water poured on a cotton pad has become a very popular and effective way to remove makeup. Simply add the micellar water to some cotton and rub it on your face until all makeup is removed. Follow this step with your favorite cleanser and your face will be as clean as ever.

Garnier makes an awesome micellar water available at CVS.

Micellar Water

Coconut Oil

Coconut oil is such an awesome organic and natural method to remove makeup.

Adding coconut oil to a cotton pad and wiping the skin will very easily remove makeup.

However cleansing afterward is important in ensuring that the oil is cleansed off your face.

Coconut Oil

Makeup Removing Cleanser

This is my favorite option. My favorite way to remove makeup at the end of the night is using a fragrance and oil free, soft cleanser. Loreal makes my favorite cleanser. This effectively removes all my makeup and i even go for a double cleanse with my favorite cleanser afterward to make sure my face is clean.

Garnier also makes an excellent micellar water cleanser and there are many great makeup removing cleansers on the market.

Loreal Ideal Clean

Disclaimer: While the information shared in DermCentric Newsletter is thoroughly researched and based on reliable sources, it is important to note that I am not a licensed dermatologist or healthcare professional. The content provided should not be considered a substitute for professional medical advice or personalized consultation. It is always recommended to consult with a qualified dermatologist or physician regarding any specific concerns or conditions related to your skin, hair, or nails.